Sociologiske Studier

Sociologiske studier blev lanceret i 2010 i et samarbejde mellem CESAU og Aarhus Universitetsforlag. Serien giver den bedste sociologiske forskning – nationalt og internationalt – en platform og profilerer Aarhus Universitet som et knudepunkt inden for feltet. Bogserien er fagfællebedømt og omfatter monografier såvel som antologier, på både dansk og engelsk.

Serien redigeres af Rasmus Antoft (Sociologi, AAU), Anders Blok (Sociologi, KU), Christian Borch (CBS), Stine Thiedemann Faber (Center for Forskningsanalyse, AU), Laura Gilliam (DPU, AU), Lars Bo Kaspersen (Statskundskab, KU), Lene Kühle (Teologi, AU), Carsten Bagge Laustsen (Statskundskab, AU), Kristoffer Stegeager (Statskundskab, AU) og Henrik Kaare Nielsen (Æstetiske Fag, AU).

I serien er hidtil udkommet:

Tegningekrisen. Som mediebegivenhed og danskhedskamp
Af Carsten Stage

Konferencepris: 170,00 kr.

Tørklædet som tegn. Tilsøring og demokrati i en globaliseret verden
Redigeret af Inge Degn & Kirsten Molly Søholm

Konferencepris: 140,00 kr.

Planlægning i oplevelsessamfundet

Redigeret af Anne Lorentzen og Søren Smidt-Jensen

Konferencepris: 210,00 kr.

Køb bogen og e-bogen på vores hjemmeside til en samlet pris af 298,00 kr.

Flere titler er under planlægning i serien – og i efteråret 2012 udkommer en ny bog om klassesamfund i Danmark:

Det skjulte klassesamfund

Af Stine Thiedemann Faber, Annick Prieur, Lennart Rosenlund & Jakob Skjøtt-Larsen

På hvilken måde kan man tale om et klassesamfund i Danmark i dag? Og betyder klasse overhovedet noget i det nuværende samfund? Hovedpointen i bogen Det skjulte klassesamfund er, at skarpe sociale skel fortsat eksisterer – om end mindre åbenlyst end tidligere. Inspireret af Pierre Bourdieus ideer om social differentiering og med byen Aalborg som empirisk holdepunkt undersøger forfatterne, hvordan klassesamfundet og klasseidentitet har betydning i danskernes hverdag.

Besøg Aarhus Universitetsforlags stand på konferencen i dag. Her kan du købe bøger med stor rabat og tale med os, hvis du har gode ideer til en ny bog.

Welcome to the Danish Conference of Sociology 2012

We at CESAU (Center for Sociological Studies, Aarhus University) are pleased to welcome more than 250 sociologically interested participants to this year's Danish Conference of Sociology. Participants come from all sociological settings in Denmark, and quite a few international participants as well. This year, we have taken steps to create a more international conference, which is why most of the conference will take place in English. We especially wish to welcome our five keynote speakers, who have all, through their work, shed considerable light on the conference theme: Troubled Identities.

With Troubled Identities, we wish to focus on the consequences from the loss of stable identity markers and on the emergence of multiple new and often contradictory identification options. Most of the workshops at this conference have chosen to relate their discussions with the overall conference theme. This fact alone may be an indication that we are dealing with a very central problematic in sociology. But then, what does it mean for identities to be troubled? Let me just briefly, and by way of introduction to the conference, outline some central aspects of this problematic.

First of all, we increasingly subscribe to multiple identities. This multiplicity alone may cause trouble. If Anthony Giddens is right in saying that we are all have a need to feel ontologically secure, it is clear that these identities must be arranged in order – for instance temporally or by hierarchy.

The optimistic sociologists of the eighties saw the postmodern condition as a radical form of emancipation. We were now free to play around with our identities and have several at once. But the question is whether the concept of identity does not amount precisely to an emphasis on that which is in itself always the same. Identities demand some form of permanence – some extension in time and space – and, perhaps more urgently, they demand a core of selfhood. Our time may be postmodern, but perhaps our selves are not. When asking about troubled identities, perhaps the real trouble is to keep track of things in this jumble of identities and identification options. It is some task to put together the puzzle, and this is not just because of the overwhelming number of pieces; it is also due to the fact that they do not necessarily fit together all that well. This takes us to another aspect of troubled identities. As implied by Giddens' concept of ontological security, there is a limit to what the individual can cope with. This limit is often thematised in connection with cross pressures. It may, for instance, cause trouble if family and career do not fit harmoniously together. More trouble may ensue when we have to succeed both socially and in our passtime activities, and at the same time be fit for a marathon or two. Or what about the journalist caught between professional integrity, consideration for the democratic public sphere, and commercial considerations? Here, it is relevant to focus upon these conflicting identities themselves, but also upon the strategies by which we seek to solve the puzzle.

A third dimension is the clash experienced between the idea of a free choice of identity (or identities) and the structural limitations to which we are subject. One's choice of education and job may prove fatal when crisis and unemployment strike. One may perhaps have purchased a house at the wrong moment and bought the wrong shares, and suddenly one's retirement savings are gone. The concept of identity may here be regarded critically. All our talk about identity and lifestyle may perhaps cause a lack of emphasis on underlying structural conditions. We are the ones who have made the wrong choice, it is said. Structural problems are transformed into problems of identity, and it is thus already given who is to blame. The conception of individual free choice is perhaps most of all a problematic ideology. Is trouble connected with identities, or is something entirely different the matter?

Some identities in a given society may, fourthly, be more troublesome to maintain than others. Problems do not necessarily arise from within. They may also be due to the problem causing expectations and prejudices of others. One may have a troubled identity simply because one has trouble coping as an outsider. Being a newcomer can be difficult in small and closed societies, especially if one's culture is very different, or if one's skin colour is the "wrong" one. Expectations are always there, but one never does quite well enough. Identities, and their troubled aspects in particular, are often associated with the question of membership and matters of belonging. For instance, it is difficult to be an immigrant boy in the Danish state school if one is met with the expectation that one will, as a "foreigner", be very noisy and therefore cause nothing but trouble.

A fifth dimension is the social and personal consequences of being in trouble. Stress, anorexia, and other illnesses of the self may to some extent be traced back to the problems one may experience, when one is bombarded with expectations and offers of identification. If one is unable to handle the cross pressures, the consequence may be a breakdown of the self. What was perhaps initially experienced as identification offers and development opportunities changes into the experience of being limited and of being forced to act within a context over which one has no control – and according to ideals posed by others. The attempt to regain control may take the form of a frantic self formation project. Being anorectic or stressed out is a troubled identity. One's mental energy is extremely focused, one is entirely consumed by one's condition, but the identity by which one feels given is thoroughly unpleasant and troubled.

Finally, we might emphasise the fact that certain identities may be viewed as troublesome by those in power. This is naturally the case with identities of resistance, which define themselves in opposition to a given social order. Resistance may here go from the unwelcome over the illegal to that which is perhaps even met with lethal force. Going far back in time, the heretic was an example of a religious identity which, on the one hand, was maintained at the risk of one's life and, on the other hand, it was seen as a radical challenge to the social order. Social movements might perhaps be seen as a modern-day version of this position. As emphasised by Ernesto Laclau, an essential element of any resistance movement is the formulation of a common, unifying identity. This identity in turn often becomes the basis of the – at times – bloody reaction of the established powers. Trouble awaits for those who dare to resist.

These six problem spheres relate to what we have called troubled

Through this concept we may raise a large number of interesting questions, and we may do this in relation to the respective fields in which we work identities. Through this concept we may raise a large number of interesting questions, and we may do this in relation to the respective fields in which we work. However, the list of relevant dimensions has by no means been exhausted, and very little has been said about the way these aspects are played out within more narrowly defined social fields. After two days of conference, hopefully we will all have made some progress, and be all the wiser concerning the identity troubles of modern society.

So, once again: Welcome to the Danish Conference of Sociology 2012. We hope it will be a good and beneficial conference for everybody.

VALGETS TYRANNI

Fra alle sider opfordres vi til at opfatte vores liv som noget, der er fyldt med valg. Som varerne på hylderne i supermarkedet lader vores karrierer, vores parforhold, vores kroppe, selve vores identitet til at være noget, vi kan vælge imellem. I Valgets tyranni viser Renata Salecl, at de mange valg udgør en forhindring for social forandring, snarere end at facilitere den.

Aarhus University is the venue of the 2012 Danish Conference of Sociology. The conference takes place in various buildings around Campus: Registration and keynote lectures in the Lakeside Auditoriums; lunch in the Social Sciences cafeteria; and the workshops in buildings on the edge of Campus.

Getting Around

This is a map of the central campus. The conference takes place at the two marked locations spaced approximately 250 m apart. The nearest bus stop is very close to the Lakeside auditoriums.

Registration and name badges

Upon arrival, please register at the registration desk where you will receive name badge and conference folder. Access to sessions will only be granted with your personal badge. Participants are kindly requested to wear their badges during all meeting activities. You can always ask any of the students at the registration desk for help.

Internet access and PowerPoint

A computer is available at the registration, and you will find a guest login in the conference folder. We kindly ask presenters to download slides to the local computer before the workshop starts. Student assistants will be available at all sessions and are easily identified by their conference shirts.

Food

At the conference there will be lunch and fruit at the cafeteria, as well as coffee and cake at the lakeside auditoriums for those participants who have registered for this. You may also buy food and beverages at the various cafeterias on Campus, which you can bring with you to the auditoriums and workshops.

Money and credit cards

Denmark is not part of the Euro zone, and you have to use Danish Kroner. Almost all shops take major credit cards, often indicated by signs in the shop window or entrance. Otherwise you can ask if it is possible to use credit cards. You should have no problems accessing your credit cards at the numerous ATMs.

Conference dinner and ARoS

Thursday afternoon the last lecture ends at 16.30, and the dinner starts at 19.30 at the Aarhus Museum of Art. If you are joining the conference dinner you are cordially invited to visit the exhibitions at the museum. You will get your ticket when you arrive at the museum. The dinner ends at 23.00.

You can take bus number 12 and 13 from the Lakeside Auditoriums (Nørrebrogade) to the Museum (Mølleparken) or Bus 14 to (Banegårdspladsen) at 02, 12, 22, and 42 past every hour until 17.41, and every hour at 39 and 43 from 18.39. Note that the city busses are yellow, not blue, and please note that you do not enter at the front, but in the middle or in the back. You can buy tickets on the bus using either cash or credit card. The museum is easily recognised

An unscientific quantitative analysis of the Danish Conference of Sociology

On the right is a graphical rendering of the most prominent words and concepts from the abstracts submitted by this year's congress participants. It provides an image of the tendencies at the Danish Conference of Sociology 2012, and a closer look tells us a number of interesting points about the content of the congress.

First of all, it shows that social identity, not unexpectedly, is central in the participants' contributions. The participants have clearly taken this year's theme – troubled identities – to heart, as the purpose is to draw focus upon the various challenges that characterise the identity labour of the social individual in modern society. A quick count of Danish versus English words shows that the majority of the participants have chosen English as their working language, which gives us an impression of the linguistic orientation in the field.

Through a couple of random samples from the picture, we may delve deeper into the academic diversity at this year's congress and catch a glimpse of how the participants' contributions illuminate the overall theme by various approaches and angles. The first choice falls on urban. Several contributions are concerned with space and the sociology of the city, dealing with urban spaces and developments in relation to identity. One example is Jakob Demant and Laura Krebs, who are interested in understanding various normative conceptions of enjoyment in the Danish clubbing environment. This is illuminated by looking at the conceptions of guests, bouncers, and night club owners, respectively, concerning proper behaviour in this social space. Likewise, in Emil

Ethnically challenged: From “Marginal Man” (Robert Park) to “Clash of Civilizations” (Samuel Huntington)

In my paper, I shall focus on two forms of ethnically troubled identities, one concerning minority groups, the other concerning the majority population. At first I shall look at men and women of ethnically mixed family backgrounds (e.g. black/white, or Jewish/non-Jewish). From social science to literature to everyday life, these people often were, and sometimes still are, considered to be freaks: neurotic, disturbed, unstable and restless (see for instance Robert Park’s classic book “The Marginal Man”). Second, I shall turn to the majority population. Today, in the age of migration and globalization we find a remarkable shift, the emergence of a new kind of ethnically troubled identity. Now in many Western countries it is the majority population who often feels threatened: overrun by foreigners, their native culture losing ground because of the invasion of “others”, at home no more in their own country(see for instance Samuel Huntingtons work on the “Clash of Civilizations”).

Renata Salecl

Violence as a response to the ideology of choice

Contemporary capitalism relies on the ideology that everyone can make it in today’s society and that people are essentially free to choose the direction of their lives. This ideology has greatly contributed to people’s feelings of inadequacy, anxiety and guilt. At the same time, people also more and more engage in various forms of self-torture as well as violent outbursts towards others. The paper will look at the news forms of self-violence that we can observe in post-industrial capitalism as well as at the new forms of violence expressed in the society as such. It will also look at how the fantasy structure of contemporary capitalism has contributed to the new forms of ignorance that we can observe in the developed and developing world.

Banu Bargu

Biopolitics and human shields

In recent decades, we have witnessed the emergence of new forms of warfare in which the human body has been utilized as a novel and lethal weapon. The performance of self-destructive violence, especially in its more aggressive forms directed at the enemy, has gathered much scholarly attention. Suicide attackers have become symbolic (if dystopic) figures of this new warfare, raging across various troubled geographies, not distinguishing between combatants and noncombatants, and drawing upon new and increasingly theologized forms of identification and allegiance. My purpose in this paper is to draw attention to the inverse figure of the “human weapon”; namely, the “human shield.” This figure is the exemplar of a similarly biopoliticized utilization of the body in warfare; however, its purpose is not to destroy but to protect others. The human shield suggests the possibility of asserting simple, unarmed existence, with all of its sacrificial potential, in order to stage a political intervention against war itself. The human shield (similar to the human weapon) is a potent political figure that utilizes the plenitude of “mere life,” but sets this potential to work for contrasting aims. My paper attempts to unpack and explore this figure of the human shield, drawing upon contemporary theories of biopolitics and resistance.

Laura Gilliam

The trap of resistance: Being “immigrant” and “Muslim” in Danish schools

In resemblance to other groups of socially and culturally marginalized boys, many ethnic minority boys in Danish schools have developed strong anti-school sentiments and oppositional cultural forms while still recognizing the status of education. An effect of this is that quite a few boys are finding themselves in troubled positions as ‘immigrants’ and ‘Muslims’. Yet they are also trapped in positions in between opposing identities and conflicting school strategies. This emphasizes how troubled positions are rarely single-faceted, but multi-faceted, negotiated and contested between different cultural repertoires. A closer look at different boys’ ways to handle these troubled positions illuminates how this affects the identities and social strategies of individual boys.

Per Mouritsen

Troubled Citizens: Civic integration as (mis)recognition

North-Western European nation states currently experience a civic turn in immigration, naturalization and integration policy and discourse, which renders nineties ideas of ‘post-national membership’ obsolete. Although optimistically diagnosed as constitutional patriotism (J.W.Müller) or liberalism (C. Joppke), the disciplinary elements and onus on social cohesion and national identity is at some distance from Habermas or Rawls. Integration programs, naturalization requirements, tests, declarations, and screening devices reflect national citizenship cultures as forms of (mis)recognition – in a tough Hegelian sense: The new politics of recognition, far from multicultural minority rights, names good and bad citizenship, ironically recycling liberal, social democratic, and civic republican ideals as so many ways of stereotyping predominantly Muslim identities as un-civic – dependent, un-reasonable, un-democratic, and passive. The lecture suggests elements of a critique of this civic misrecognition.

ARoS

A diverse museum

by Ida Marie Piper

Last year, ARoS art museum broke every attendance record. According to the museum director, this owes to the fact that art has finally become a phenomena "for everyone". ARoS offers a broad range of exhibitions directed at children as well as art lovers.

"Art museums should be like railway stations. All sorts of people show up at railway stations, filled with expectations of great experiences", says Jens Erik Sørensen, museum director at ARoS.

Jens Erik Sørensen has been director ever since the museum opened in 2004. From the start, he has emphasised creativity and diversity.

"Earlier, art museums were very concerned with presenting good taste to culture and educate the audience. I completely ditched that sort of thing; it was very excluding. So-called good taste made many people feel unwelcome at museums", says Jens Erik Sørensen to the newspaper Weekendavisen.

Museum guests crazy about the Rainbow Panorama

ARoS' great new investment, Your Rainbow Panorama, is part of Jens Erik Sørensen's project to make art understandable to everyone.

Your Rainbow Panorama is made by Danish-Islandic artist Olafur Eliasson. The tunnel made of coloured glass is placed like a halo on top of the museum. The colours gradually change from green over blue to red and through these panes of coloured glass, the city and the bay are visible.

Since the opening in May last year, Your Rainbow Panorama has been hotly debated. It has been called sleek and vapid, and evil tongues claim that the museum looks like an elephant asking a butterfly to dance.

Nonetheless, visitors have flocked to ARoS to see and experience the piece. In 2011, the museum had more than 500,000 visitors, almost doubling the attendance record from 2006.

Exhibitions in January 2012

To celebrate the opening of Your Rainbow Panorama, ARoS features a special exhibition of several of Olafur Eliasson's works. All the pieces are concerned with play of colours and sensory disturbance. In the piece Your Another special exhibition at ARoS features the Danish artist Mogens Gissel, whose art is downplayed and yet experimental. He moves freely among landscape, interior, portraits, and abstraction, easily shifting between naturalism, minimalism, and cubism.

ARoS' permanent exhibition features a fine collection of 19th century Danish Golden Age art, including P.S. Krøyer and Vilhelm Hammershøi, as well as 20th century modernist art. In the dark basement of the museum, visitors may explore the "9 Rooms", reserved for international light, video, and installation art. The number of rooms refers to Dante's Divine Comedy with its depiction of a journey through the nine circles of Hell. From Hell, the ascent takes us over Purgatory Mountain to the divine light in Heaven. The audience may experience a similar ascent from the dark in the 9 Rooms to the clear daylight in Your Rainbow Panorama.

Dansk Sociologforening er faglig interesseforening for sociologer og kultursociologer samt andre, der arbejder med sociologiske problemstillinger og har til formål at varetage sociologers faglige og professionelle interesser.

Vi udgiver tidsskriftet Dansk Sociologi, udsender nyhedsbreve, arrangerer foredrag og debattmøder om aktuelle sociologiske emner samt arrangerer danske og internationale sociologkongresser i Danmark. Vi har lokalafdelinger i København, Aalborg, Roskilde og Aarhus, der står for lokale arrangementer. Desuden kan der organiseres arbejdsgrupper om faglige emner efter behov.

Vi opfordrer alle, der beskæftiger sig med sociologi, til at melde sig ind i foreningen. Se venligst hvordan I melder jer ind på hjemmesiden www.sociologi.dk. Det årlige kontingent for studerende og arbejdsløse er 400 kroner – det dobbelte for uddannede i arbejde. Som medlem får man tilsendt tidsskriftet Dansk Sociologi, hvilket giver et glimrende indblik i, hvad der rør sig i dansk sociologi. Man får desuden tilsendt Acta Sociologica, et højt ranked internationalt tidsskrift.

Håber at møde mange af jer i foreningens regi.

OLAFUR ELIASSON YOUR RAINBOW PANORAMA

Med Your rainbow panorama har kunstneren Olafur Eliasson skabt et værk, der går i dialog med den eksisterende arkitektur og forstærker det, der i forvejen er givet, nemlig udsigten over byen. Der er skabt et rum, der nærmest udvisker grænserne mellem indenfor og udenfor – hvor man bliver lidt usikker på, om man er trådt ind i et værk eller ind i en del af museet.
